BIRDS OF AMERICA: AUDUBON PRINTS FROM SHELBURNE MUSEUM ON VIEW AT THE GRAND RAPIDS ART MUSEUM APRIL 15 THROUGH AUGUST 14, 2011

Unique Interpretive Galleries, Collaborations and Programming Accompany the Highly Acclaimed Life-Size Images by John James Audubon

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 22, 2011 – The Grand Rapids Art Museum (GRAM) presents Birds of America: Audubon Prints from Shelburne Museum, opening April 15 and remaining on view until August 14, 2011. The life-size images depict a colorful array of native birds as discovered and immortalized by the early nineteenth century great American woodsman, John James Audubon. Birds of America is widely recognized by art historians and naturalists alike as the most significant natural history publication of all time. An original bound edition of the prints recently sold at auction for the highest price ever paid for a book. Between 1819 and 1838, John James Audubon and his engraver Robert Havell produced 435 handcolored and engraved plates of a scope and standard never before seen in ornithological recording. Thirty prints have been selected from the collection at Shelburne Museum to demonstrate the duality of Audubon's work as both artistic compositions and scientific documentation. This exhibition features some of Audubon's most desirable illustrations, admired for their life-size scale, compelling backgrounds, and often dramatic compositions.

Birds of America: Audubon Prints from Shelburne Museum is expected to appeal to both local audiences and summer visitors to the region with an extended run through mid-August. In addition to the exhibition, an additional interpretive gallery includes contextual and informative installations and activities. A large 19th century map of the United States with the sites where Audubon found the birds, a biographical chart, etching technique display, and hand-coloring exercise enhance the exhibition experience. An audio tour is available and features commentary on several topics including habitat, birdcalls, conservation, and taxidermy. A video installation displays captioned original watercolors in sequential order. Also on view are publications by and about Audubon, including a rare edition of the bound Bien Edition of Birds of America. Both the video installation and Bien Edition are provided by Joel Oppenheimer Gallery of Chicago

Related programming and collaborations provide ongoing opportunities to explore and discover the many fascinating aspects regarding the techniques and aesthetic, subject matter, and charismatic personality of this great American artist and pioneer. GRAM partners with John Ball Zoo for a chance to appreciate and compare the natural beauty and essence captured in Audubon's artwork with several species live in their habitat at the Zoo. Maps and interpretive materials at both locations will guide and inform guests throughout the exhibition duration, and special family events are planned including a "trolley day." GRAM Theater Group performs during Friday Nights at GRAM in May, with a short play about Audubon created by local playwright and published author Tanya Eby. The Grand Rapids Audubon Club is included in a variety of programming, from lectures and gallery talks to evenings on the Museum Terrace searching the downtown skyline for peregrine falcons. Saturday All Day with the Arts features hands-on art-making activities for the whole family with a special visit in July by Dr. Bird Brain (aka Pete Stobie of Kalamazoo Nature Center), and Summer Art Camp focuses on Audubon and other art depicting a wilderness theme. Each camp will have a bird visit, courtesy of John Ball Zoo staff. Local scholars of biology and printmaking are scheduled to lecture in May. See below for further details and check the website throughout the exhibition for added programming.
